Cultural Detours Features American Treasures! Pebble Hill Plantation

“Cultural Detours” invites you to take a tour of some of America’s cultural treasures that have storied relationships with horses. We begin by introducing Pebble Hill Plantation in Thomasville, Georgia. Plantation photographer and designer Marlane Taylor captured the two resident Percherons, King and Earle, at play one day and she submitted her photo to the Photography Contest. We were delighted to meet them all and in turn, it is our pleasure to introduce collectors to this spectacular plantation that is truly an American treasure.

Collector of the Month
Scottie Littlestar

Her professional name is Scottie Littlestar and she is a full-time psychic whose extraordinary sensibilities have helped people better understand themselves, and their lives. When asked about the special connection she felt with Painted Ponies, she reminisced about the kinship she felt with the first horse she received at the age of eight, and the feelings of freedom that come when she gallops across a pasture. Dream Horse: A Painted Pony
by Cathy Bryant

I am a horse of many colors, from every story ever told.

I run free across the moors, and the plains wild and free.

I’ve carried many soldiers, across the dusty Plains,

Even marched across the oceans, to the waiting trains.

I’ve delivered the mail, and all sorts of things.
